

CHILDHOOD

Eliodor was a gifted young student, but his parents didn't have the resources to give him the best education available. Through hard work and determination, he graduated high school, something achieved by only 2% of Haitian students. And most schooling is totally out of reach for the 200,000+ Haitian children in domestic servitude.

A SCHOLARSHIP

After much deliberation and encouragement from his community, Eliodor heard God's call to become a pastor. But like the majority of Haitian church leaders, he couldn't afford seminary. Then he was given an opportunity: a scholarship through Haiti Partners. "Haiti Partners gave me more than a scholarship to study for ministry. They are my mentors."

A NEW VISION

Through workshops, retreats, and apprenticeship in our work with churches across Haiti, Eliodor has become a leader who cares deeply for the rights of those who are often overlooked. "Haiti Partners is the reason I embrace a holistic mission for the Church. I now have a heart for vulnerable children and children in domestic servitude. I've also changed so much in the way I view women in the church and society."

"I see a church where each member looks more like Christ, with a heart of justice, love and humility."

THE CALL

As a part of his studies, Eliodor was placed in a local church for an internship. Earlier this year, even before he was officially ordained, the church in Port-au-Prince invited Eliodor to become their next pastor.

"I'm like a fish in the water because I found my call. I'm serving God's people, and I don't see myself doing anything else. Nothing would be more meaningful."

 HIS CALL.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

Next month, Eliodor will be part of the first graduating class of Micah Scholars. He is grateful and knows he's received opportunities that many don't get in Haiti.

He accepts this responsibility. Eliodor will work as a pastor to transform his church and community. A lifetime of study led to this graduation. A lifetime of working for God's kingdom and for justice is ahead.
